GETS SIX YEARS IN PENITENTIARY

Schoolfield Mill Operative Sentenced for Attempting to Kill His Wife.

[Special to The Times-Dispatch.]
Danville, Va., March 21.—John M. Sykes, a Schoolfield mill operative, was today sentenced to six years in the Penitentiary in Chatham Circuit Court for the attempted murder of his wife on January 27, in one of the weaving rooms of the mill. The case commenced shortly before court took a recess yesterday, and was finished early during the afternoon. A jury composed of farmers tried the case, and remained out for thirty minutes.

Sykes, it is said, separated from his wife previously, and on the morning endeavored to make up the quarrel with her. She declined and he shot her in the breast.

END OF ARGUMENT IN STOKELY CASE

Judge Announces That He Will Deliver Charge of Jury This Morning.

Elizabeth City, N. C., March 21.—The opposing counsel in the Stokely trial contended all day long in fierce legal battle, fighting every inch of the ground. The insanity plea upon which the defense hopes to secure the acquittal of Murden Stokely, the twenty-year-old Perquimans County farmer, of murder for killing J. Penitentiary. The argument closed at 6:30 o'clock, and Judge Wheeler announced that he will charge the jury tomorrow morning at 9 o'clock.

Those who have followed the case closely contend that Stokely's acquittal is certain, while others take a gloomy view and believe that he will be convicted. The chances are bright for a hung jury. A large crowd surged in to hear the counsel's speeches.

LORD LEVEN JOINS BIG BANKING FIRM

Visited America Last Autumn, and Became Angry at Newspaper Men.

BY LA MARQUE DE FORTENOT.
LORD LEVEN and Melville, who was over here last autumn, staying with Mrs. Ogden Goetz at Newport and with other American friends and who enjoyed considerable amusement by his angry encounters with inquisitive newspaper reporters, has joined the important London banking firm of Huth & Company, and bids fair to become as familiar a figure in the region around the Bank of England as his father and grandfather were before him.

His father, the late earl, was the principal partner of the banking houses of Melville, Evans, Fickes & Company, and of Williams, Deacon & Company. The latter, having a very large American connection, had succeeded to the business of the great firm of Williams, Deacon, Labouchere, Thornton & Company, which played a very important role in international finances during the early days of Queen Victoria's reign. The late earl was often on this side of the Atlantic in connection with his banking business, and was the best man at the wedding in New York of Consuelo Yznaga to the late Duke of Manchester.

The eleventh Earl of Leven, that is to say the grandfather of the present peer, was also a banker, and so much of a business man that he actually went to the length of disinheriting his youngest son, the Hon. Norman Melville, for sending his boys to the University of Cambridge, "whereby the probability of his becoming fitted for business had decreased." That earl married the daughter of Henry Thornton, M. P., friend of Wilberforce, of Thackeray, Macaulay and Gladstone in his younger years. Indeed, the Thornton villa at Clapham, so graphically portrayed by Lord Beaconsfield in the opening chapter of the novel left unfinished at his death, was the headquarters of that society of wealthy plutocrats constituting the pillars of the Exeter Hall school, who led the abolition movement in England and who for a time exercised a most powerful influence on English politics. Henry Thornton's "Family Prayers" had a wide vogue in this country and proved a source of large revenue to the author.

The present Lord Leven is twenty-seven, a representative peer of Scotland, is sandy-haired, tall and very rich. While at college he distinguished himself as a steeple-chaser, and in diplomacy he has a commission in the cavalry of the Territorial forces, and came rather prominently before the public some time ago through his presentation to the King of $150,000 for use in the arrangement of a chapel for the Knights of the Scotch Order of the Thistle in the Cathedral of St. Giles at Edinburgh.

Lord Leven, who is the fourteenth earl of that title and the eleventh Earl of Melville, is at the head of a very ancient family, and his earldom of Melville is transmissible in the female as well as in the male line. His principal trouble with American newspaper reporters when in this country last autumn was his objection to their addressing him "without being properly introduced."

That the Hamiltons are quite as high in favor at court to-day as under the two previous reigns is shown by the fact that King George has just appointed Captain Lord John Hamilton, of the Irish Guards, to be deputy master of the royal household in the place of Sir Derek Keppel, who has recently been advanced to the mastership on the retirement through ill health of Colonel Sir Charles Frederick.

Lord John is one of the two brothers of the new Duke of Abercorn. The late Duke of Abercorn, their father, was chief of the household of King Edward, and his accession to the throne, and afterwards one of his lords in waiting; while Lord John's aunt, the late Duchess of Buccleuch, was grand mistress of the robes and of the household to Queen Victoria, and afterwards to Queen Alexandra. Lord John, who is unmarried, and just thirty years of age, is, therefore, in every sense of the word accustomed to court life and on terms of intimacy with the members of the reigning dynasty, including those of the royal household.

There are no posts at court that bring one into closer association with the King and with the Queen than those of master and deputy master of the royal household. These two officials practically run the entire royal establishment, and it is the master of the household who sends out the "commands" of the King and Queen to private and semi-official entertainments, including those for the dine and sleep guests at Windsor. Their duties include the very prosaic but exacting one of supervising and checking up the weekly domestic bills of the household, the baker, the candlestick-maker, and other tradesmen.

They have, moreover, all the worry and trouble of keeping in order, placing and supervising the royal servants—a much more difficult task than the lot of the head of the household of an American multimillionaire or even the manager of a large hotel. For royal servants are extremely touchy regarding the privileges of their various positions, the limitations of their duties, their hours of work, their remuneration, their grades—that is to say, their precedence—and Heaven only knows what besides! All these points are governed by tradition, and practically the palace help "below stairs" have a government of their own. It is the business of the master of the household and of his deputy to harmonize the relations of all these people, and it necessitates almost superhuman tact, forbearance and phenomenal command of temper under extreme provocation. Then, too, the royal household is very far from being a pleasure. It might be likened, if the comparison may be pardoned, to a very large traveling circus that suddenly pulls up stakes and makes a jump of hundreds of miles. When the King and queen move from Windsor to Balmoral or from Balmoral to Buckingham Palace, the master of the household and his deputy have to attend to the transportation of Their Majesties, their horses and their baggage, also the servants and their luggage, often at little more than an hour's notice. They engage the trains for the royal railroads, arrange for regular meals at the hotels, putty on and check the impedimenta, and when anything fails to arrive at its destination, trace whatever has gone astray—in fact, do the thousand and one things that only an experienced tourist agent could himself enumerate.

The foregoing is merely the plain sailing, the routine of office. It frequently happens, however, that at the last moment there is a change of plans. After everything is provided for and a start is about to be made, a political crisis, the death of a relative of the royal family or some other untoward event may upset everything, and the whole party may have to be shipped off in a different direction. And the master of the household and his deputy must do the work so skilfully and unobtrusively that their royal charges shall not suffer the slightest inconvenience or bother therefrom.

Sir Derek Keppel's appointment to the mastership of the household at the beginning of the year has led to the inauguration of some extremely radical reforms, of the necessity of which King George and Queen Mary have gradually become convinced since their accession to the throne, but which they were unwilling to institute until the retirement of Sir Charles Frederick. Sir Derek is just the man for this sort of work. A younger brother of the Earl of Albemarle, he possesses a wonderful talent for organization, due perhaps to his training as a civil engineer. He has been an equerry of the King for the last twenty years, and there are few who enjoy to a greater degree the confidence of the sovereign and of Queen Mary.

TENER PROMISES AID IN VICE SUPPRESSION

Governor Receives Members of Illinois Commission Fighting White Slavery.

Harrisburg, Pa., March 21.—Governor Tener to-day assured the members of the Illinois Vice Commission that he would send a special message to the Pennsylvania Legislature urging that it take steps to stamp out white slavery and to study earnestly the subjects relating to vice, with a view to co-operating with sister States in a national movement. Members of the senatorial commission from Illinois set forth in a conference with the Governor the aims of their inquiry, giving some of the results, and asked the assistance of Pennsylvania.

Lieutenant-Governor Barrett O'Hara was the chief speaker on behalf of the Illinois delegation. Senators Beall and Juul supplementing his remarks. All three declared that they wished to correct the impression that the commission sought in any way to reflect upon the purity of America's working women, but that it desired to find out whence came the victims of white slavery and to take all possible means to stop the traffic. Mr. Beall stated that thirty-two Governors had been heard from in response to the commission's inquiry, and as a result of the disclosures in Chicago, increase of wages of women and girls had taken place. Offers of co-operation had come from all parts of the country, and Chicago was tendering its help, he said.

Lieutenant-Governor O'Hara said that the commission desired to relieve the menace surrounding the girls who have to earn their living, and that they are entitled to food, clothing, a bed to sleep in, shelter and a reasonable amount of amusement.

"If these are not provided," he said, "the time will come when they will be demanded, and radicalism might prevail in government."

"In addition to white slavery," said Mr. O'Hara, "the commission has found it essential to consider the question of wages in relation to vice, and other menaces, such as songs, which ten years ago would not have been countenanced, and which are now being tolerated in homes; obscene dances, sequestration in public schools and domestic service."

The commission left to-night for Washington, whence it will go to New York.

PRISONERS COST $10 A DAY

"Alimony Club" at Ludlow Street Jail an Expensive Affair.

New York, March 21.—It costs the city $10 a day to keep each civil prisoner in the Ludlow Street Jail, according to a report which investigators have prepared for Mayor Gaynor. The jail is known as "the alimony club" because the prisoners there are mainly men who have refused to pay alimony. According to the investigators some of the prisoners have more comforts at the jail than they did at home. There are twenty-four attendants in the jail while there are seldom more than a dozen prisoners, and some of them are as three or four. The investigators will present figures to show that the city costs three times as much by boarding both prisoners and guards at the best hotels.

POCKETS PICKED FOR $45,000

W. A. Hall Loses Negotiable Securities New York, March 21.—W. A. Hall, president of a magazine company, was robbed in the subway yesterday of $45,000 worth of negotiable securities. The theft became known early to-day through an advertisement in which Mr. Hall offered a large reward for the return of the papers, with "no questions asked."

Mr. Hall was on his way from Wall Street to the Grand Central Station to deliver the securities, which he had placed them in an inside pocket of a coat, which he had buttoned, but when he stepped off the train at the Grand Central Station he found the securities had been clipped off and the securities were missing. He remembered three men who had boarded him in the train, but he declares he will not prosecute the thieves if they return the securities.

STRIKERS' RANKS ARE SPLIT

Pottery Girls Return to Work When Given Concessions. East Liverpool, Ohio, March 21.—The first break among the striking pottery girls came to-day, when seventy-five employees of the electrical pottery factories returned to work with an increase of 10 cents a day and abrogation of the silence rule, which did not permit conversation during working hours.

The seven hundred striking girls from the general ware pottery works to hold a mass-meeting this afternoon, at which a counter proposition from the manufacturing pottery works was made upon.

The Trades and Labor Council, made up of representatives from all organized labor bodies in the city, unanimously decided that if the girls accepted aid from the industrial workers of the world they would not have the support of the council in the strike.

WINS LIBERTY BY HUNGER STRIKE

Sylvia Pankhurst Outwits Prison Authorities by Refusal to Eat.

London, March 21.—Sylvia Pankhurst, the militant suffragette, to-day won her freedom from Holloway prison by means of a hunger strike. Her release was granted on the ground that to further detain her would endanger her life.

Miss Pankhurst, who is the daughter of Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst, leader of the militants, was sentenced February 18 to two months' imprisonment for engaging in a window-smashing campaign in the East End of London. At the same time Miss Zelle Emerson, of Jackson, Mich., received a like sentence for the same offense. Immediately she was placed in prison Miss Pankhurst went on a hunger strike, and the prison authorities resorted to feeding her forcibly by means of a tube.

MAYOR DIRECTED TO GRANT APPEAL MADE BY NEGRO MAN

[Special to The Times-Dispatch.]

Houston, Va., March 21.—Last week A. B. Briggs petitioned the judge of the Circuit Court of Halifax for the issue of a writ of mandamus against H. W. Woodall, Mayor of South Boston. On March 14, Briggs, a colored man, was tried in the Mayor's Court for a minor offense and fined. He desired to take an appeal to the Circuit Court, but Mayor Woodall refused to grant it. Judge Barksdale heard the case of the petitioner and awarded the mandamus, returnable on March 24, directing and commanding Mayor Woodall to grant the appeal from the decision rendered against Briggs.
